There's no doubt that the Super Smash Bros. series is probably the most popular "spin-off" game Nintendo has produced in all their years of existence. The idea of having the most popular Nintendo characters fight off each other in battle royal was crazy back then but it proved it was a really good one.

Everything in the series is pretty detailed and very well made, including, of course, the music. Melee probably has the memorable tracks, while Brawl has the most vast soundtrack of the series, but even the first game had pretty good arrangement tracks and also some pretty good original ones, like Meta Crystal for instance. This track is featured in the Metal Mario match in the main mode of the game, which is hard since Metal Mario can take a lot of damage and is hard to take off the stage. This track really adds something to the stage since it is so fast-paced and intense, so it definitely feels like a boss match.

Something to add, Hirokazu Ando, a long time composer for many Nintendo games, has been the main collaborator for the soundtracks in the whole series, pretty much he has been the main composer for it.
