

On this week's show, we start off by acknowledging our 13th birthday! Thanks for your support for all these years. We get right into some of the big stories of the week which include the controversial release of Batman Arkham Knight on the PC. While the console versions seem well recieved, the PC feedback has been so strong that sales of the game have been suspended. Could this be damaging for WB Games, or even all future PC releases? Are we getting too tin-foil hat when we see comparisons from what happened in the great video game crash of the 80's? Our hosts and live listeners lend their opinions.

Also in the news:

- * Nintendo to get early access program?
- * We might have had F-Zero for the Wii-U ...
- * Rampage: The Movie
- * Diablo 3 Update coming
